

Picture No. 2: To wire the cones to the flat frame, first lay a row of cones on the outside rim without wiring. Then, lay a second strand of cones on top of the perimeter row with the butt ends on the inside rim of the frame. Wire.

cones until all 25 or 30 are fastened together in a row.

"It is imperative to pull the wire snugly into the petals as you wrap the ends together," says Mrs. Ebbert.

When the two strands of the 25 are strung together, the next step is to wire them to the flat frame. As shown in picture number two, lay one row around the outer rim of the frame. Do not wire.

After that outer row is laid in place, take the second string of cones and place them on top of the outer cones with their butts along the inner rim of the frame.

At this point, the wiring begins. Connect the wire to the inner ring of the frame, and wrap from the underside to the top, over the cones, and down through the petals, connecting both rows of cones at the same time. Do not be afraid to pull the wire snugly between the petals as you wrap.

Once the basic wreath is wired to the frame, Mrs. Ebbert suggests trimming it with dried fruit, acorns, yarrow, cockscomb, or anything natural.

"The trim hides any holes you might have in your wreath," she says.

She also suggests adding lights to the wreath, a touch she describes as "very effective."
