Vegetable varieties tested

DOVER, Del. - This Summer's newest salads will feature "Liberty" cucumbers and "Floramerica" tomatoes. According to University of Delaware extension garden specialist Dave Tatnall, these superior new varieties are among the All-America Selections for 1978.

According to Tatnall, "Floramerica" is one sturdy tomato. It's resistant to more diseases and disorders than any other hybrid developed for home use. Best of all, "Floramerica" develops good-sized, pleasant-tasting tomatoes that hold their shape when cut. And, "Floramerica" begins producing ripe fruit seven to 10 days earlier than "Beefsteak" varieties, so anxious home gardeners don't have quite so long to wait for this super crop.

Cucumber "Liberty" is suitable for salads or for pickling. A hearty producer, "Liberty" has excellent resistance to scab and cucumber mosaic. It also possesses some field tolerance to downy and powdery mildew, anthracnose, angular leaf spot, and target spot. Given proper care, one could expect six to eight harvests from a "Liberty" vine, with the first one due about eight weeks after seed planting.

As everyone knows, home gardeners do not live by salad alone. For dessert, "Sweet Favorite" watermelon is this year's All-America Selection. This new hybrid has garden resistance to anthracnose and fusarium wilts. "Sweet Favorite" is crisp, sweet-tasting, and deep, bright red. Halves of these 20-pound melons fit on refrigerator shelves. With "Sweet Favorite" you'll be enjoying cool watermelon about 85 days after seed planting.

Expert judges have given these three varieties top honors based on their performances at trial grounds across the United States and Canada. However, if one wishes to give them the ultimate test, in their own home garden, seeds will be available this Spring in selected garden centers and seed catalogues.
