Columbia R2, received the awards.

Steven E. Huber, acting district administrator, gave the annual report of the organization. Highlights of the 1977 year included a record tree seedling sale of 114,000 young trees, an attendance record of the board of directors of 98 per cent, and the adaption of a storm water management resolution. Huber told the audience that the conservation district gave technical service to 153 cooperators, and eight miles of terraces, 6.5 miles of pipe outlet terraces, and 14.7 miles of grassland waterways were constructed.

Speaker for the evening was Noah Wenger, state representative from the 99th district. Praising the group for their part in conservation, Wenger related that he believes that farmers and agri-business people are the kind of people who will work for a living, self-reliant people.

Speaking of the duties of a representative, Wenger explained that he thinks of himself as the closest link between the people and Harrisburg. He helps people with their problem, votes on bills, and his biggest challenge, he related, is providing leadership to the people. Getting involved, he related, does pay off.

Talking on conservation problems, he told that he thinks all the people should try to conserve their natural resources. "The greatest problem," he stated, "is to try and convince people of the need to protect the land and get them involved in the fight to do so."

Touching the various problems of soil erosion, water runoff, and the preservation of farmland, Wenger praised the Lancaster County Soil Conservation District for their efforts. Among those he cited as working long and hard for the preservation of the soil were Amos Funk, Aaron Z. Stauffer, and Henry Hackman, who all have served as former presidents of the state soil conservation commission.

Entertainment for the evening was provided by the Solanco mixed Octet who sang a medley of songs for the group.
