

Guernsey field day

Protein testing is an important tool which should be utilized in milk marketing, Haenlein noted. "We must test milk to know what's in it if we want to promote good-tasting milk." He pointed out that there is no direct economic benefit in testing for protein or solids non-fat, but said that taste appeal can be determined through protein testing.

One other source of potential income for dairymen is through the sales of bulls. Haenlein asked, "Why should we not have informal syndicates among neighbors? We should produce more high proof bulls."

Fifteen-year-old Scott Rhineer, son of Mr. and Mrs. Park E. Rhineer, 1128 Willow Street Pike, Willow Street, was selected winner of the calf contest. Scott, who will be in the ninth grade at Lampeter-Strasburg High School, said, though he does not live on a farm, "I'll find something to do with the calf." He said he was "surprised" when his name was called, and when asked if he knew anything about raising a calf, he said, "No, but I think I'm going to learn."

Bruce Richards, vo-ag teacher at Lampeter Strasburg, said, "I'm very pleased to have a student win a calf. It will be a good start for his project."

Overall winner in the Scott Rhineer was winner of the calf at the Guernsey field day.
