

Swedish IFYE

"went through" 1500 children in a whole school, which he thoroughly enjoyed. "People here need to know about other countries because you don't learn it in the schools."

According to his host father J. Harold Grube, Widmark's visit is "the best thing that's happened to us all Summer." In fact, the whole Grube family is enthusiastic about his visit. There are four Grube children: Missy, 15; Tim, 19, Mike, 22, and Katie Anne Heisey, 24, who lives close by. Another enthusiast is Mrs. Grube's mother, Katie Keath, who is 79 years young and is enjoying the foreign visitor.

With his intricate knowledge of his home country and his great desire to learn about his host country, Widmark is being the perfect goodwill ambassador.

Grube said, "Anders called it a program of love, and love is really what it is all about."

Wildlife group appeals dismissal

WASHINGTON, D.C. - Despite a legal setback, the National Wildlife Federation will continue its fight to force the Carter Administration to explain why it has cut the U.S. Forest Service's budget request by 25 per cent.

NWF has announced it will appeal a ruling by U.S. District Judge Gerhard A. Gesell, in Washington, D.C., dismissing its suit against President Carter and the Office of Management and Budget.

The suit, filed in June, 1978, charged that the Administration violated the Forest and Rangeland Renewable Resources

Planning Act when it cut the Forest Service's 1979 budget from $2.4 billion to $1.8 billion. According to NWF, the nation's largest citizen conservation group, the law requires the Administration to explain whether its proposed budget would carry out Forest Service policies already set by Congress, and if not, to give the reasons for requesting less money.
