Four Lebanon dairy herds

 addition, there were 17 owner-sampler herds.

The 1978 DHIA summary shows that Lebanon County dairymen realized $1583 worth of milk per cow, which compares with a product value of $1498 for the state average. Total feed costs were $659 per Lebanon County cow, compared to $641 for the average DHIA cow in the state. The value of the milk after feed costs are subtracted are $924 and $857 for Lebanon County and Pennsylvania, respectively.

In other activities during the dinner meeting, Harold and Donald Bollinger were singled out for additional honors for having had the high individual cow for both milk and butterfat. Their Willow Maple Reflection Mae, a 12½ year old Holstein, finished the year with 32,923 pounds of milk and 1185 pounds of fat in 365 days. It is her fourth lactation over 30,000 pounds of milk. She is sired by Lime Rock Reflection Oscar.

Two featured speakers at the banquet were Lebanon County Dairy Princess Connie McFeeters and State DHIA representative Ray Pruss. Miss McFeeters, commenting that she felt no need to talk about dairy products to a group of dairymen — "I can't tell you anything you don't already know" — chose instead to entertain the audience with a bit of humor and a definition of God.

Miss McFeeters represents the Lebanon County dairy industry and is available for speaking engagements before civic, school, and social groups. Interested parties should contact either her, Brenda Maulfair, or the Cooperative Extension Service, 400 South Eighth Street, Lebanon, 17042, phone 717-273-3748.

Pruss, who came prepared with a number of statistics and revelations about Pennsylvania's 1978 DHIA averages, noted — as did Bair — that herd production and individual cow production continue to soar. In addition, he noted that a slight decline in cows per herd has been observed by the Pennsylvania Crop Reporting Service. Whereas the average Pennsylvania dairy herd contained 55.3 cows a year ago, that figure is up to 55.4 this year. Ironically, however, there are reportedly more cows in the state this year than there were last year, indicating that some new herds must have been started. In closing his remarks, Pruss revealed that a second somatic cell testing machine has been purchased for $43,000 and should be in use by January 15, 1979.

Following is a list of those who surpassed a butterfat average of 550 pounds.
