

Three generations involved with 4-H competition

By KENDACE BORRY DAUPHIN — Behind at least one of the beef exhibitors at the Pennsylvania Farm Show next week there are three generations of involvement with 4-H and cattle.

This year the Sweigard family will be represented by Monique Sweigard, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Sweigard. She will be showing five animals in the beef show, all registered in her name.

The twelve year old young lady comes from a strong farm background. A member of the Upper Dauphin County Baby Beef Club, it was her grandfather, William Sweigard, who about 32 years ago, restored the former beef club back to life, as he put it, mainly for his neices and nephews to join. At first, he noted, there were only five members in the club, but soon it began to grow. And of course his own son and daughter were active members of it when they became old enough to join.

Later his son Eugene went to Penn State, where among other things he was active on the Livestock Judging Team.

But previous to last year the family the only purebred stock the family had shown at the Farm Show was in the hog shows. Raising Durocs and Yorkshires, the best of the Sweigard's hogs were shown at Harrisburg with championship ribbons following them home. They will not be showing any hogs this year at the Farm Show due to the schedules conflicting with the beef shows.

The family, which farms over 1500 acres, of which half is planted in corn, has always had about 600 steers on feed, but no purebred stock.

But last year, Eugene went to a bull sale looking for Monique Sweigard, Halifax R3, will be taking her steer, Pete to the Farm Show next week. She will also be showing four heifers at the show.
