

Penrose Hallowell

he has the right concern for agriculture and proper attitude to want to do a good job for all, regardless of party affiliations.

The agriculture secretary-designate is a graduate of Penn State University, having majored in agricultural economics. He operates Pennywell Farms, near here, in partnership with his son, James. The farms encompass a total of 290 acres and some 170 head of Holstein dairy cattle.

Active in various farm organizations, including the Pennsylvania Farmers Association, he has served eight years as director of the Farmers Home Administration in Harrisburg. He was president of his Bucks County Farmers Association for four years and is a past chairman of his County's conservation district.

If the Senate confirms his appointment, Hallowell hopes to "help the Agriculture Department be of more service to farmers in the area of marketing," he said. He is particularly concerned about fair prices, he added. Other items on his agenda would include the milk security fund, rural roads and bridges, and proper promotion of Pennsylvania's agricultural products.

But rather than issue directives to the state's farmers, Hallowell says he wants to be responsive to them. He wants to hear their wishes and concerns and meet with farm organization leaders, he said.

In addition, Hallowell wants to bring about a better understanding of government - to help restore confidence in government - as well as help with the understanding and administration of regulations
