Case and Cummins in joint study

RACINE, Wis. — J I Case Company and Cummins Engine Company have entered into an agreement which provides for the joint study and design of a new line of advanced, fuel-efficient diesel engines.

Announcement of the agreement was made jointly by Case Chairman and Chief Executive Officer Thomas J. Guendel and Cummins Chairman and Chief Executive Henry B. Schacht. They said that the two firms would collaborate in designing a line of 50 to 250 h.p. diesel engines that will complement Cummins' current product line.

The design program will be conducted at Cummins facilities and will involve engineering and other technical personnel from both organizations. The engines would be available to Case for use in its construction and agricultural equipment and to Cummins for sale to all others.

"We are pleased to be involved in a cooperative effort with the people at Cummins, whose engines have such an excellent reputation for performance," Guendel said.
