Sperry New Holland announces expansion

NEW HOLLAND - Sperry New Holland has announced plans for building a new plant in Columbus, Nebraska, and a major expansion of the Mountville department of its plant at New Holland, Pa. The expansion is needed to keep pace with the company's expanding sales in North America, according to Jack Keister, vice president and general manager of the North American Division. Already underway is a 260,000 sq. ft. addition at Mountville, Pa., where the company operates a 90,000 sq. ft. facility as a department of the main plant at New Holland, Pa. The new facility will continue to operate under the New Holland plant manager.

Columbus, Nebraska, has been selected for the new 200,000 sq. ft. midwestern plant. The new plant construction will get underway this Summer and completion is slated for late 1980.

What products will be built at the new facilities has not yet been determined.

Food bargain improves

WASHINGTON, D.C. - Food costs less in take-home pay almost every year, according to recently released USDA figures. This does not mean food costs less money, but that overall income is rising faster than food costs. Nationally, food expenditures in relation to disposable income were 16.5 percent for 1978, compared with 16.7 percent for 1977. Department figures indicate that this percentage has declined nationally from 23.4 percent in 1929, indicating that food costs less today in relation to income than it did almost 50 years ago.
