

Foreign soybean demand expected to grow

ATLANTA, Ga. - Soybean demand in Japan and Western Europe should continue to grow at a rate of about five per cent annually, but anticipated yield increases and significantly greater planting of soybeans in Brazil, and competition from other oils, may pose threats to American soybean exports in the future. That was the message from experts participating in Ciba-Geigy's World Soybean Report at the American Soybean Association's annual meeting here on Aug. 13. Speakers representing Japan, Western Europe, Brazil and the U.S. were linked via satellites in the first, live closed-circuit TV business conference.

creasing. Vienna projected the 1979-80 Brazilian soybean crop at 543.8 million bushels. Exports, he forecast, would be approximately 68 million bushels of beans, 7.2 million metric tons of meal and 904,000 metric tons of oil. Crushings during the March 1980 through February 1981 season are anticipated at 440.9 million bushels.

Dr. Hiroshi Nakamura, director of Hohnen Oil Co., Tokyo, forecast a steady annual growth of three to five per cent in Japan's utilization of soybeans. He stressed his nation's need for a dependable source of supply and diplomatically chided American growers about the amount of foreign matters shipped with U.S. soybeans. He also warned that Japanese consumers prefer rapeseed oil over soybean oil because rapeseed oil is more stable than soybean oil in terms of color and flavor reversion. Due to development of a new Canadian variety, consumption of rapeseed oil and meal is growing fast in Japan. He estimated Japan's rapeseed imports at about one million tons this year, a 20 per cent increase over last year.

Johannes M. Randag, president of the International Association of Seed Crushers, forecast that the nine European Economic Community countries, plus the expected three new members - Greece, Spain and Portugal - would import about 500 million bushels of soybeans this year, with a five per cent annual increase in demand. Randag also called for an uninterrupted supply of soybeans, and pointed to possible heavy competition from coconut oil in a couple of years.

Assuring the overseas experts, American Soybean Association President Merlyn Groot indicated that soybean acreage would be available as long as American growers were assured profitable markets for their crop. He also pointed to the association's commitment to soybean marketing, and research efforts of the association, universities and U.S. government to improve yields, and called for free trade channels between the U.S., Europe and Japan.

Even though soybean production costs in Brazil are lower than in the U.S., said Paulo Robert Vianna, executive director of that country's Production Financing Commission, marketing costs are higher. As a result, Brazilian and American beans compete on an equal footing. However, he reported that Brazilian yields, currently at 26 bushels per acre, and planting, are both in-
