

Red Lion ag class docks a lamb

RED LION — The freshman vocational agriculture class at the Red Lion Senior High School assisted Mr. Roth, student teacher, with docking of a dorset lamb.

The class is studying sheep management, parts and meat cuts identification, and sheep nutrition for the completion of their sheep production unit. Docking is a management procedure recommended to eliminate maggots that could cause serious health problems for sheep.

The continuing education curriculum for high school students in vocational agriculture at Red Lion exposes students to various learning experiences in agriculture which the students will need to successfully compete for a job in an ag-related occupation after graduation in the business community.
