

Star Farmer plans future

(Continued from Page B5) milking parlor on his father's farm which currently is not set up for milking. Jesse even has a site picked out which he feels would be excellent since the location would provide good drainage for a manure pit. "I would like to be a dairy farmer", said Jesse. I do not have the cows that I would like to have, but hopefully that will come. If I do not dairy farm I would like very much to be a herdsman. I love to show cattle and I would like to do my own artificial inseminating."

While he attended an artificial inseminating course last April, he really has not gotten into doing artificial inseminating on his own yet.

Jesse's love for showing dairy cattle can be expressed through his winnings at 4-H and FFA cattle shows. This past summer at the South Central FFA District Show Jesse came home with reserve senior and grand champion honors. At the state FFA Show he won first with his Holstein aged cow and third with his two year old Holstein.

When asked how the FFA has helped him, Jesse replied, "It has helped me in many ways. The key to success is in being active not only in FFA but in everything around you - community work, Young Farmers, Junior Holstein Clubs, 4-H work and church work. FFA allows me to put most of what I have gained back into my enterprises or projects, as well as supplying personal growth. It also teaches a person a lot about leadership abilities." Jesse Reichard knows the score, but he is optimistic and has the type of attitude that makes good prospective farmers.

Jesse Reichard, left, Pump House Rd., Waynesboro, shows his FFA awards to his parents John and Esther. Jesse received his Keystone Degree and was named Regional Star Farmer in Agriculture Production at the FFA Convention held at Harrisburg.
