

Ag district bill

included is a taken, the district would automatically be renewed. Some people had objected to the reverse-sunshine provision. The Senate Ag Committee admitted the provisions of SB 1264 make it difficult for the owner of a small, isolated farm to gain protection under the provisions of the bill.

But they said they feel it is better to concede as lost such parcels near large urban centers and concentrate on saving large plots farther out.

The minimum size district of 500 acres would allow a fair amount of land to be attached to the district even if such land were not contiguous with other land in the district.

And in a district of 3000 acres, perhaps a good size for a local municipality, as many as 1200 acres could be in smaller size parcels.

Troublesome to some observers is the apparent conflict with the House of Representatives' nuisance ordinance bill.

That measure sailed handsomely through the House and was expected to meet little resistance in the other Chamber. It would give farmers protection against a host of nuisance laws.

But the measure may be held in the Senate in favor of SB 1264 which includes the same provisions.

As one Senate Ag Committee member explained, "Nuisance protection is one of the carrots to get farmers to put their land in ag districts."

Since farmers already can get preferential tax assessments even if they are not in an ag district, the lawmakers say they feel they need to offer some additional incentive to keep farmers interested.

The House's nuisance bill, the Clean and Green Act, and other provisions would provide piecemeal protection against a majority of farmer problems, excluding the loss of land.

While the Senate seems to favor the idea of the House nuisance bill, they say it could weaken the basis for their SB 1264.

So, it seems likely the House's provisions, incorporated in SB 1264, could see their way into the lawbook through the back door.

The State Grange is watching SB 1264 and says it supports the bill's basic concepts.

Two years ago similar legislation was passed by both the Senate and the House. Farm leaders say they hope the present administration will be more sympathetic than the past one when it comes time for the governor to sign the bill into law.
