

Will 1980's be era of the egg and microwave?

BY DICK ANGLESTEIN
LANCASTER — What's the connection between a microwave oven in the kitchen of a suburban or urban home and the long, low poultry houses that dot the area's rural countryside?

Not much at present. But, according to William Patterson, General Manager, Weaver's Quality Eggs, Inc., Lancaster, there will be a growing relationship between the two as the dawning new decade progresses.

"The 1980's will be the age of the microwave," Patterson explained.

"We're now on the threshold of a new horizon for prepared foods and eggs will be right in the center of the development of new products that can be popped into a microwave oven by busy, working families."

Skyrocketing sales figures for microwave ovens support his prediction about how changing life styles may affect the future of the incredible, edible egg.

Although the first microwave oven was introduced some 20 years ago, sales only started to take hold within the past five years.

Purchases of a million microwaves in 1975 increased to 1.6 million in 1976.

In 1977, microwave sales reached 2.2 million and continued to climb to near 3 million in 1978. Last year, more than 4 million of the quick cooking ovens were sold.

"We're just now entering an era to find whole new ideas for the use of the egg in prepared convenience foods to take advantage of this boom in the use of microwave ovens," Patterson said.

"The egg is just setting there waiting for people to do something with it and change it into a different form as a prepared food."

Presently, the more than 7 million eggs that are processed weekly through the Weaver plant leave the modern, three-year-old facility essentially as they arrive.

The eggs come in and leave as a raw product, either in the original shell form or as a fresh or frozen liquid.

But the day may not be too far off when the egg will leave such a plant as an already prepared omelet, serving of French toast or a quiche that is individually wrapped and ready for heating in a microwave oven to provide a fast, tasty, protein-rich breakfast for a husband and wife before they rush off to work.

The Northeast appears to be ripe for the microwave boom, too.

Across the country, about 15 percent of households now have microwave ovens.

Ownership ranges from about a quarter of all households in Florida and California to only about three percent in the Northeast.
