The case of Farmer Jones and the 5¢ orange.

Farmer Jones had finished his shopping in town. Returning along Main Street with two dusty nickels in his overalls pocket, his eye caught a hand-scrawled sidewalk sign: "ORANGES ON SALE — 5¢ EACH!"

Feeling thirsty, it being a sizzling hot day, Farmer Jones plucked an orange from the makeshift stand... paid his nickel and continued whistling on his way.

As his fingernail bit into the rind, Farmer Jones' mouth watered at the succulent treat within. But at the very first taste his mouth turned dry. The orange was sour and flat. He suddenly didn't feel like whistling again.

Too late — for he was down to his last 5¢ — he remembered Ben's Country Store. Ben's oranges were the best in town. Plump, juicy, fresh. He'd built his business on quality and service, and people always came back for more.
