the Berks County farm country from Philadelphia with their six children. Their oldest daughter, Theresa, helps in managing the cave and giving guided tours. The others lend their hands to the necessary work of painting picnic tables and keeping the grounds in tip-top shape. There is a relaxed feeling surrounding Onyx Cave. When you pull into the graveled parking area after winding down the rural Berks roads lined with beautiful farms, you won't be besieged with neon signs and tourist-trap propaganda. Actually, unless you double check the sign at the entrance, you won't be sure you're at the right spot. The cave and the Rizzo's office blend in with the quiet surroundings.

Outside there is a little picnic grove where families can relax with a basket lunch, or just absorb the sounds and smells of nature between tours.

Inside the office, the Rizzos continue the rock and fossil museum established by the former owner. During the 10-15 minute wait between tours, visitors are encouraged to look around at the collection and view a unique film about caves.

"Because we didn't know too much about caves when we bought this one, we went
