ing on the tractor with her dad when she was about 5 years old. "I always liked the massiveness of that big tractor."

Bev's barn chore career began when she was 12 years old. Her delegated job back then was washing udders and dipping teats. She said she is still assigned that job today.

She added she sometimes helps in putting on the milkers, but noted her dad and brother do most of the milking which starts at 5 p.m. and finishes up at 7 p.m.

The Burkholder's present set-up uses a pipeline and dumping station system in their stanchion barn that holds their 75 head of milking Holsteins. But, the Bev gets the milkers ready for the evening's daily ritual.

The new princess demonstrates she remembers how to milk without the modern technology—but her family is in the process of building a new parlor for their 75 Holstein operation.
