

Dairy support

Other factors could help increase output. The nation's dairy herd is fairly well culled, so little decrease can be expected there.

Per cow milk production is expected to be higher next year because of better genetic makeup of the nation's cows.

On the other hand, there are arguments for a price support increase. Some observers see troubles should current law be changed.

For instance, the prices of red meat and poultry are predicted to rise faster than dairy prices. Since these foodstuffs compete with dairy products in the marketplace, consumers may increase consumption of dairy goods.

The current drought in the feedgrain producing Midwest may be reflected in higher feed costs next year, a factor which could slow dairy output.

These two factors could brighten the supply-demand picture.

Dairymen also worry that if USDA can avoid the October increase, it may go for another amendment to the law sometime before the next scheduled adjustment, April 1, 1981.

They say USDA could seek a drop in price support levels from 80 percent to 75 percent of parity, thus avoiding a second price adjustment and keeping support at the same level for as much as 18 months.

The decision on whether or not to go for an amendment, due quite soon, will depend on which economic scene USDA and dairy leaders feel is more likely.

As of Thursday afternoon nobody was willing to commit themselves to a direction although the trend of Washington thinking was that no changes would be requested from Congress and the status quo would be maintained.

For dairymen, there was no guarantee of success should one path be chosen over the other. Dairymen could win or lose either way.

Sheep health forum to help producers

KENNETT SQUARE — As part of a continuing effort to improve veterinary services to the Pennsylvania sheep industry, the University of Pennsylvania School of Veterinary Medicine, in cooperation with the Pennsylvania Sheep and Wool Growers Association and the Maryland Sheep Breeders Association, is presenting an evening forum on sheep health care for producers.

The first Sheep Health Forum will be held on Thursday, August 14 at 7 p.m. at New Bolton Center's Alumni Hall here in Kennett Square.

The forum will provide the producer with up-to-date information on such diseases as mastitis, parasites, pregnancy disease and foot rot, to be presented by a panel of veterinarians and sheep experts.

The fee for this forum is $5 per person or $10 per family. Advanced registration is advised.

Make checks payable to the University of Pennsylvania and mail it to Dr. Susan Donoghue, New Bolton Center, 382 West Street Road, Kennett Square, PA 19348.

For more information contact Dr. Donoghue at 215/444-5800.
