Bergland interview

farm program planning has been to take the 1930's experience and programs and extend them and patch them up.

That won't work. World food requirements will double in the next 10 years. Our land base in the United States is being depleted.

Exports are breaking all records. It likely will continue. We've increased exports by 35 million tons in just three year's time—that's a 50 percent increase. We won't see it continue because we don't have the land base.

What I'm arguing for in the 80s and beyond is getting into value added. I want to be able to export purebred livestock from Pennsylvania and other places to help developing countries improve their agricultural capacities.

I'm more interested in the next phase of developing a demand for textured soybean products and flour and semi-processed foods than in continuing the campaign to generate demand for raw goods.

Next is we are in the middle of a complete overhaul of the research agenda. I have discontinued federal research grants for some projects.

I think, generally speaking, applied research should be the function of state universities and private industry.

I want to get more federal dollars into the long range, high risk, but potentially high pay-off activities, dealing with matters like converting cellulose to energy, genetic engineering of corn plants to produce nitrogen, new genetic developments in the soybean.

One of the reasons we are interested in good relations with China is that China is the homeland of the genetic base of the soybean. Our researchers think we can construct a whole new family of soybeans.

Our research agenda has to branch out into things we never paid attention to, those exotic new sciences.

On the home front we have problems with farming marginal land, have to put soil conservation programs in a better light.

At a later press conference Bergland defended the Carter Administration's record on farm matters. He spoke of the benefits gained from U.S. farm exports in the U.S. balance of trade.

He called the Russian grain embargo "more interesting than important."

He said if, after the close of this year's harvest, dairy farmers and cattlemen find themselves short of feed, the ASCS can provide cash assistance.

But, he noted, Pennsylvania has not reached the stage of some Western states where farmers are paying $100 a ton for hay.

He concluded by confirming the 1980 drought equalled the 1936 drought in both lack of rainfall and heat. But, he noted, the absence of high winds had prevented a second dust bowl situation.

Crop count

Sorghum - In the parched areas of the Southwest, the grain sorghum harvest is calculated to be 547,000,000 bushels. That's a drop of just about one-third from last year.

Tobacco - Across the country, tobacco yields are set at 1.79 billion pounds, up 17 percent from last year.

Pennsylvania tobacco yields are even better. Keystone tobacco is running about 25 percent above last year at 22,100,000 pounds.

The state jump in tobacco is due to both higher yields and an increase in acreage. Yields are averaging 1,700 pounds to the acre, compared to 1,580 pounds last year. Acreage totals about 13,000, compared to 11,200 last year.

Another barometer of the effects of the heat and dryness is reflected in pasture conditions.

In the nation, pasture conditions are averaging about 61 percent of normal, compared to a figure of 86 percent last year. The 1968-74 average is 74 percent.

In the Commonwealth, pasture conditions are 69 percent of normal, compared to 85 percent last year. Average condition is 81 percent.
