Colt castration, a question of cutting.

A reader asks:

Why can't the basic horseman or farmer castrate the new born colt while the testes are down during its first several days?

We used to want to wait and see if the colt would make an outstanding stallion. We wanted to put a husky neck on the animal, so we would wait until he was two or three years old before we would castrate him.

Now we are sweating necks to thin them up.

Stallions are a dime a dozen and the vet wants $50 to cut them.

I think a 1980 management decision would be forth coming. Why not cut the colt during the first 10 days with a razor blade?

Dr. Sheaffer comments:

I am not in favor of castrating infant colts with a razor blade.

Testicles in a young horse are not always properly descended so early in life. And, there is a problem with controlling hemorrhage. It is often difficult to ligate or crimp the vessels in the cord.

The presence of male hormones, primarily testosterone, in the normal growth process is important in the development of healthy muscle and bone. Withdrawing the hormone at such an early age will usually result in smaller, effeminate body structure.

It is difficult to sterilize properly a razor blade or pocket knife. I believe that when surgery is performed on an animal the right sterilized surgical instruments should be used.

Surgical procedure on a two or three year old is much safer than on an infant colt. A two year old's testicles are generally better developed, structures are more easily defined, and they are descended through the canal in a more definite way.

Under developed or partially descended testicles are more difficult to remove

Senate approves bill to expand crop insurance

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The Senate Monday approved and sent to the House a House-Senate conference bill to make comprehensive crop insurance available to all farmers and on all major crops throughout the Nation.

Sen. Herman E. Talmadge, chairman of the Senate Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry, said the expanded crop insurance program is urgently needed to provide farmers with adequate protection against losses from natural disasters, such as the extended drought that continues to grip much of the southern and southwestern parts of the country.

The new all-risk, all-crop insurance program will be phased into place over a period of time starting with 1981 crops.

“The protection the existing programs provide often is insufficient or non-existent to meet emergencies when and where they arise,” Talmadge said. “The present federal crop insurance program is now available in only about half the Nation's counties and on only 26 crops. In Georgia, only 61 of the state's 159 counties are included in the existing crop insurance program.”

“It makes no sense to me — and it makes no sense to farmers affected — that this insurance protection is available to some and not to others, even when they may be neighbors operating farms side-by-side divided only by a county line,” he said.

The measure approved by the Senate extends the present limited Federal crop insurance coverage to all counties and to all major crops and would increase the capitalization of the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation from $200 to $500 million.

yield must make available to farmers coverage for 75 percent of normal yield and lesser levels including a yield coverage of 50 percent. Under the insurance program, the Federal government would, in general, pay 30 percent of participating farmers' premiums on that portion of each policy insuring up to a maximum of 65 percent of yield. Indemnity payments would be based on the projected market price.

The bill includes a number of provisions designed to assure that the private insurance industry will have the opportunity to participate in the expanded, all-risk crop insurance program. The bill would authorize private companies and agents to participate in the program if approved by the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation. The Federal premium subsidy would apply to all-risk privately written insurance that is reinsured by the government, as well as to coverage provided directly by the government.

In addition, the conference bill gives farmers the option of eliminating hail and fire coverage from their Federal policies and substituting coverage from private firms. Where this is done, the premium charge on the Federal policy would be reduced by amounts ranging from 15 to 30 percent, depending on rates for private insurance in individual areas, to offset the reduced coverage.

“The measure approved by the Senate extends the present limited Federal crop insurance coverage to all counties and to all major crops and would increase the capitalization of the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation from $200 to $500 million.
