Three farm bills posed to move

HARRISBURG — Three farm bills are in good position to move to a vote next week in the Pennsylvania Senate.

All of the bills were in second consideration in the Senate this week. Two farm tax relief bills may find some difficulty, but the third bill should have clear sailing.

The measure with the best chance of moving is HB 2640, the Johnsongrass bill. It would declare Johnsongrass a noxious weed in Pennsylvania.

It is far short of the scope of the original noxious weed bill introduced early in the 1980 legislative session. That measure would have allowed the Secretary of Agriculture to appoint a committee to declare weeds noxious.

But there seems to be little resistance of any sort to HB 2640, which has seen no changes on the Senate side, and it easily could move to the governor's desk before next week is out.

HB 1608, provides exemption to the one percent capital stock franchise levied on the total assets of family held corporate farms; and HB 1176, the inheritance tax relief measure, both have strong support of the senate agriculture leadership, the Grange and PFA.

HB 1608 passed the State House on March 26, and 1176 passed shortly thereafter.

But there is a fear among members of the farm lobby that the measures may run into a stumbling block.

Sen. Franklin Kury's name is the one most often mentioned as a potential stumbling block to the two farm measures.

Several reasons for blocking the bills are given, the most common being opposition to measures which give benefits to special interest groups, including farmers.

Still, farm interests on the Hill remain optimistic the measures will move.

While the lawmakers are scheduled through the end of the week of September 29th, it is expected the legislature will remain in session for an extra week.

And there remains the possibility that the Senate will return for a day or two after the election so bills which are not acted upon in the next several days have a chance to become law without dying on the vine.
