

Eastern-Leprino deny any mob connection

SYRACUSE, N.Y. — Officials of Eastern Milk Producers Cooperative based in Syracuse, New York and Leprino Foods of Denver, Colorado issued the following joint statement Wednesday:

There has been much publicity recently of organized crime in the cheese business, and more especially in businesses related to mozzarella and pizza cheeses. It should be kept in mind that much of this publicity is focusing on an extremely small segment of the business. Major manufacturers of mozzarella cheese include subsidiaries of large wellknown corporations whose affairs are public, such as Beatrice Foods, Universal Foods, Unigate, Inc. and Mid American Dairymen.

"The one company, whose owners are of Italian descent which has been successful in the mozzarella business due to professional management, hard work, production and product innovation is Leprino Foods. "Leprino's name should not be associated with this very small element, but rather with the credible companies who make most of this country's mozzarella. The following is Leprino's position relative to insinuations concerning underworld connections:

"Leprino Foods has become aware over the past several weeks, through newspaper reports, of insinuations about some connection between the Company and Joseph Bonanno, Sr. The Company's knowledge of these insinuations is limited to what has appeared in the press, and it appears from the press accounts that the connection with Mr. Bonanno is based on a piece of paper found in his trash.

"No one from the Company has seen this piece of paper or has any knowledge about the circumstances under which it was produced.

"The Company is both curious and concerned about the insinuations that are being made about a connection between the Company and Mr. Bonanno and, in an effort to put an end to those insinuations, the Company has requested that the FBI conduct a complete and thorough investigation of Leprino Foods, of the piece of paper found in Mr. Bonanno's trash, and of any allegations concerning any connection between the Company and organized crime.

"The Company is certain that the investigation being undertaken by the FBI will show no connection between it and Mr. Bonanno or any other element of organized crime. Because the Company's integrity has always been of paramount importance, the Company will continue to take all available action in the future to protect its name and reputation".
