 joys in the project, but she felt she had a good relationship with them and she enjoyed watching them learn and grow. Archery is still basically a boy's sport, and when Deb competed at 4-H state days she was the only girl. Nevertheless she placed second as an individual. Her goal as a 4-H leader for next year is to have a county archery team to compete in the state contest.

She became interested in the sport at Camp Swatara and began participating in archery intramurals in the eighth grade "as a causal pastime." In her junior and senior years Deb took archery in physical education classes and in her freshman year at Millersville she readily got involved. She is now a member of the archery team there.

Deb has also served as co-leader of the wildlife project and the first year helped organize an overnight camping trip for six children. The project grew, however, and this year Deborah organized a two-night camping trip for 27 children, six adults and three teen leaders. Part of the project included orienteering, scavenger hunts and other activities to familiarize the youngsters with wildlife and conservation.

Deb has been a teen leader in the Mountville Club for five years, and in her very first year she was named the outstanding teen leader in the county.

Deborah's enthusiasm for 4-H is boundless. "There are lots of ways that 4-H is beneficial. On the project level kids learn new things and how to do them better. There are new projects which teach them new experiences. On the deeper level, the kids develop their personality and while 4-H is not religion-based, it does teach morals. There is no swearing and no cheating. It instills values that I feel are good."

Admitting that she benefits from the competition found in 4-H, Deb says striving for a blue ribbon can bring positive results. "It really inspired me. My sewing improved to get a blue ribbon. Even a white ribbon can help a kid if it is handled right. To me competition is valuable. It gave me the incentive to do my best - it egged me on," she states.

A strong believer in the value of staying with 4-H, Deborah states, "It's better if you grow up with it. It is beneficial to the people who stick with it. 4-H was my only real activity outside of school and I put all I had into it. I realized it was a commitment."

With a chuckle, Deb says that perhaps her interest in 4-H is hereditary since her mother is organizational leader for the club. The Enders have been involved with the club for 13 years.

Deborah's 4-H experiences have helped her travel far and wide - to Wisconsin as part of an exchange program and many times to Penn State first as a delegate to Leadership Congress, then as a street camper and then as a street camp adviser.

A 1979 graduate of Hempfield High School, Deb is also active at the Mountville Church of the Brethren.

Although she must close out her career as a 4-H member, Deborah Enders will just continue doing what she has been doing - serving as a leader and helping younger members learn new

Top U.S. officials told of need for mushroom quotas

WASHINGTON, D.C. — As the President's impending decision on restricting mushroom imports approaches the October 14 deadline, the Pennsylvania Food Processors Association, with the help of State Auditor General Al Benedict, conducted a meeting in Washington D.C. with Lynn Daft, President Carter's Associate Director of Agriculture and Rural Development, Eric Vaughn, Vice President Mondale's Issue Staff and William Bohem, Agriculture Advisor to Charles Schultz.

The meeting was held to discuss the problem of mushroom imports and the immediate need for the five-year import quota recommended by the International Trade Commission.

The need for this specific meeting was necessitated since the recommendation from the International Trade Commission will go directly to President Carter's staff who in turn will advise the President as to the decision he will make on the International Trade Commission's recommendation.

According to Rocco V. Pugliese, executive director of the Pennsylvania Food Processors Association, he felt that the meeting was needed due to the complexity of the problem and the strong desire by the industry to once again become a force in the state's economic community.

Also, Pugliese said he was heartened with the positive concern displayed by Benedict, the State's leading Democrat, in not only helping to arrange the meeting, but also in insuring that the Carter Administration be made well aware of the plight of the mushroom industry.

As a result, the meeting accomplished our main objective and that is, in meeting with those who have a direct access to the President, so that a careful evaluation be made on the International Trade Commission's recommendation and that relief can be successfully attained for the industry.

skills and develop the positive attitudes which she learned through 4-H.
