Not Responsible For AccidentsSheep producers hold meeting to set lamb quotas

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Representatives of the National Wool Growers Association met last Monday with officials of the Special Trade Negotiators Office in Washington to plan talks among the governments of the United States, New Zealand and Australia on an agreement to set a formula for the orderly importation of lamb into the United States.

"Actual negotiations are still down the road," said Daniel Murphy, director of government affairs for NWGA, who, along with NWGA's Washington attorney William Silverman, represented the wool growers at the meeting. "But we have set the process in motion, and we believe that both the New Zealand and Australian governments want to resolve this problem as badly as we do."

The Special Trade

Negotiators Office is a division of the Executive Office of the President responsible for international trade agreements and policy.

In seeking government-to-government talks, the National Wool Growers Association is hoping to reach a voluntary agreement that will make a countervailing duty suit against New Zealand and Australia unnecessary.

"We are prepared to file the suit," Murphy said, "but we are steadfast in our belief that all other avenues of compromise must be exhausted before doing so."

In Burley, Idaho, NWGA board chairman Roscoe J. Rich emphasized an agreement among the three nations would not increase the price of lamb in the United States.

"In fact," Rich said, "it would probably have a stabilizing effect on the market by leveling the supply of lamb in this country and ensuring the orderly and predictable expansion of markets to other sections of the country."

"In no way are we seeking to block New Zealand and Australia from the domestic market," Rich said, "but only to make certain that our producers receive a stable and fair price for their product. The sheep industry in the United States is growing at an impressive rate, and with an orderly import policy, all lamb producers, foreign and domestic, will be able to grow and expand even faster."

The Special Trade Negotiators Office will now make initial contact with the New Zealand and Australian governments and develop a timetable by which the talks can proceed. The NWGA is hopeful that the talks can be concluded before the end of the year.

However, if the negotiations are unsuccessful, Murphy said, "We will pursue the countervailing duty suit and press for legislation in Congress next year to provide for a predictable flow of lamb into the United States."
