Ida's Notebook

Ida Risser

Last night just about dusk I walked through our meadow and looked along the river for our five large white-grey geese, which disappeared a week ago, a few flakes of snow began to fall softly. I do wish it would snow during the day so that I could at least enjoy the sight of the flakes floating down.

Then I spoke to some hunters that I spied in our woods but they said they knew nothing about our waterfowl. Some wild ducks and wild geese are shot here on the Conestoga.

So this morning after clearing the walks and porches of three inches of fluffy white snow, filling the furnace with expensive coal and making the beds, I sat down to write my diary. Then I picked up a colorful seed catalogue that also contained "everything for the garden." And I would say that that was a correct description of the contents.

What first caught my eye was a picture of a snake. Now I'm not too fond of snakes to start with as I sometimes am surprised to find them coiled under a lima bean bush. So, I assumed that now, not only were earthworms, praying mantis, and ladybugs being sold — but also snakes.

Upon closer inspection I realized that this was an inflatable reptile made of vinyl that was used to scare off birds.

The bright colors of the lilies, iris, roses and dahlias are almost unbelievable in their beauty and perfection. They entice one to place orders for them immediately. But now seed companies are more and more getting into accessories to gardening. Not only every imaginable tool to raise vegetables is for sale but also many appliances for preserving your homegrown produce.

Also sold are pest controls, wearing apparel and indoor gardening supplies. So, if you need it, they've got it.

Del. Holstein breeders to meet
