MARTINSBURG, WV — Keynote for the Ruby Anniversary Program for National Peach Council's Convention at Del Webb's Townhouse in Phoenix, AZ February 17, is R G Chilcott, Senior Vice President for Nationwide Insurance, Columbus, OH. "The Freedom to be Enterprising" sets the theme and tone for the producer program of "Government's Role, Influence on the Nation's Peach Industry". Chilcott believes that free enterprise is a subject on which speakers should be outspoken, and he pulls no punches in proving where the culprit lies threatening the productive capacity of America's economic system. "All that we call civilization has come from productivity gain. All our human, cultural, social and economic well-being comes from productivity gains. There are many causes for productivity declines. But the pre-ponderant causes are government regulation, government spending, government taxation, and government erosion of incentives. They tend to stifle, even suffocate productivity," contends the insurance executive. Through a comparison of statistics on government spending, wages and salaries, Gross National Product, he shows the indirect correlation of more for government, less for people's living standards. Today, the 14 million private businesses, including peach producers, in America are living proof that dreams come true, that freedom to be enterprising has become our greatest national asset, the foundation on which a thriving and productive America continues to build and grow. More than just complain about the intrusion of government in the arena, the former marine spells out the obligations that come with freedom to be enterprising what can be done to assure that free enterprise will be understood, nurtured and protected by those who will lead America in its third century of national life, how to cultivate a spirit of common purpose with government to make certain that regulations do not become disincentives to enterprise. Chilcott heads a showcase listing of government people meeting head on with industry spokesmen and growers to deal with the negative and positive aspects of government influence and interference in the peach industry in particular for the four day meeting Feb 16-19. DER appeals immunity in Clean Streams law

HARRISBURG — Pennsylvania Department of Environmental Resources last Friday filed an appeal in Commonwealth Court against an Environmental Hearing Board ruling that township supervisors have official immunity under the Pennsylvania Clean Streams Law.

The department is appealing only this portion of a December 10 EHB decision which assessed South Middleton Township, Cumberland County, $2000 for violating the Clean Streams Law but ruled that the individual supervisors and township secretary-treasurer are not liable as individuals under the act.

Litigation Bureau Central Region, filed the appeal, said that DER is satisfied with the $2000 assessment against the township and is appealing only to clear a legal issue.

The Environmental Hearing Board decision found the township guilty of damaging aquatic life in Yellow Breeches Creek, a trout fishery, in September 1978 when it used a bulldozer to move earth within the creek.

In its appeal, DER maintains that township officials are just as liable for violating the Clean Streams Law as are other individuals. Assistant Attorney General John R. Krill, Jr., chief of the department's Putting the bulldozer in the creek violated terms of DER stream clearance permit.
