Ben Jackson, winner of the grand champion Holstein award, won with a cow that he bought as a heifer calf, a fact which added an extra measure of satisfaction to his blue ribbon. Jackson is shown here handling the introductions between Crisco and Ginny Thornburgh, the governor's wife.

Tons of food move at commodity booths

FARM SHOW — Visitors to the Pennsylvania Farm Show have a large appetite which is reflected in the tons of food being sold at food booths run by various state agricultural commodity associations.

Officials of the Pennsylvania Cooperative Potato Growers' booth estimated they would sell about 30 tons of baked potatoes and french fried potatoes by the end of the show. They noted that the potato donut machine operates continuously from 8 a.m. to 9 p.m., turning out 1440 donuts each hour.

Another popular snack spot, the Pennsylvania Dairy Association booth, reports serving over 8500 milk shakes on Wednesday alone. Chocolate shakes outsell vanilla two to one, association members said.

According to the Pennsylvania Horticultural Association, over 14,000 quarts of apple cider, a favorite thirst quencher at the show, were sold through Wednesday. More than 2000 individual apples were also sold to visitors.

French fried mushrooms are being sold at the Farm Show for the third year by the Pennsylvania Mushroom Growers who report they will use nearly a ton of fresh mushrooms by Friday.

Also being offered for the third year by the Pennsylvania Vegetable Growers is beef vegetable soup. As of Wednesday, association members estimated they served more than 2500 bowls of soup.

The Pennsylvania Livestock booth reports they will sell nearly 20,000 servings of sandwiches and stew by the end of the Farm Show.

More than two tons of ice cream topped with honey were reported sold as of Thursday by members of the Pennsylvania State Beekeepers' Association.

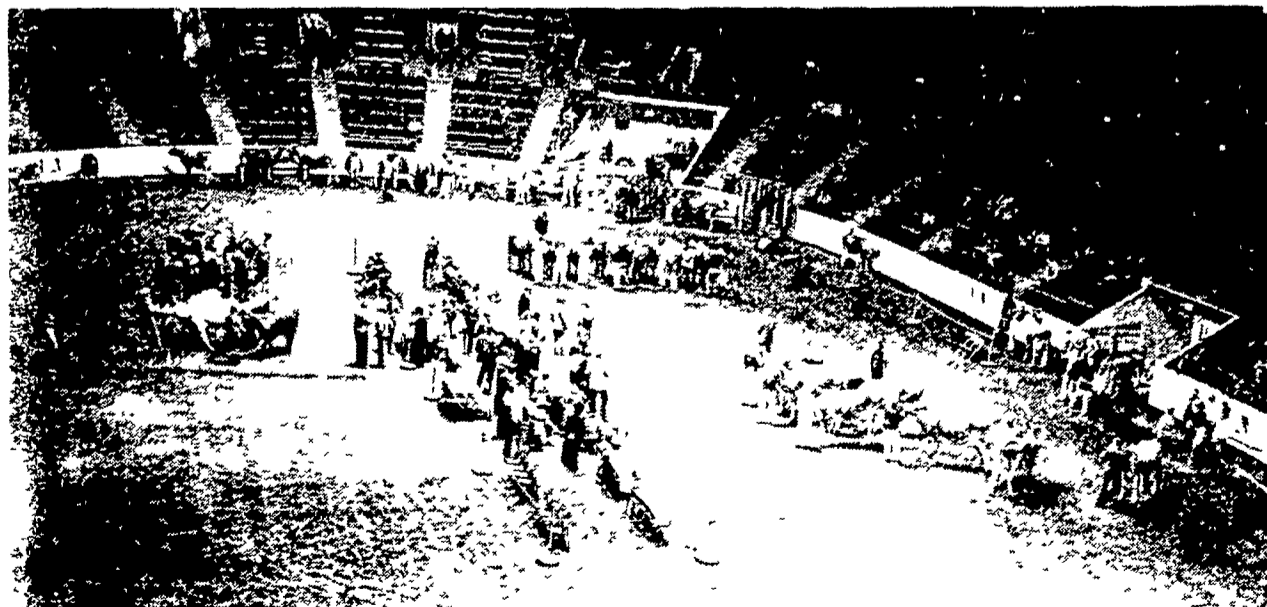

Workers at the Pennsylvania Poultry Federation booth reported serving thousands of bowls of chicken corn soup, tons of chicken sandwiches and nearly a thousand buckets of chicken.

One thing is certain—the Farm Show provides a feast for the eyes and for the tastebuds.

PENNSYLVANIA AGRICULTURE

WE'RE GROWING BETTER

Tuesday was a busy day in the main arena, with dairy judging occupying both the morning and afternoon hours. Early in the morning competition: Milking Shorthorn, Brown Swiss and Guernsey competitions were all going on at the same time.

There were more cows entered this year, fewer scatches than ever, in spite of the weather, and one of the best dairy crowds the stands had ever seen.
