

Hats highlight Holstein convention

Lancaster Farming, Saturday, March 7, 1981—C45

WHITE HAVEN — A hat-design contest added a touch of competition, and fun, fellowship to the state Holstein convention's annual ladies luncheon in the Tree Top Dining Room of the Pocono Hershey.

The highest of the high-fashion creations was on the head of Roxanne Kaufman, who covered a cardboard base with bright green felt and appliqued a farm scene over the hay and broad brim. Her design took top honors in the largest category.

Most creative designation went to Lancaster County's Pat Landis, who sliced a square plastic jug to fit her head, covered it with milk filters and black felt cutouts in the fashion of a Holstein cow.

Most dully related was a toy cow on a hat base fashioned by Ruth King.

But the hat that won the most laughs, and the most humorous award, was one modeled by Lily Nichol, wife of Holstein executive secretary Bill Nichol.

Designed by a friend, Lily's hat was a knitted ski-cap type, with four knitted mitten fingers working into the top of the cap. Labeled the "udder warmer," the white yarn hat was emblazoned in blue with the initials of Penn State University, which the Nichol family ardently supports.

Carry on the fun theme of the day was the luncheon fashion show, dubbed "Longue and Chic," which featured a satire of styles aimed at farm women.

Keynote speaker for the women's session was Jacquelyn Townsend, Miss America of 1962. In the early 1970's, the former pageant winner suffered a debilitating stroke, and her touching story related the obstacles she had to overcome in a recuperation that has taken several years.

Also featured on the women's program was Schuylkill County home economist Ruth Hand.
