

Kid's KOrner

Kids, if you start now to color and decorate this egg, you might get it finished in time for Easter, only one week away. Hang it in your window for decoration when you're done.

Don't be a pigard

Will you be able to solve this story or will you get as ruffled as a penguin? Okay, we know it's "ruffled as a chicken." But see if you can figure out these mind boggling by replacing the bold words with appropriate animals

Linus' friends made fun of him because he was afraid of almost everything. His friends call him a pigard behind his back because they were as sly as salamanders. This made Linus cry and cry and cry.

"I'm not a pigard," he said. "Someday I'll show them I'm brave." But just in case he ever should meet up with danger, he silently carried an elephant foot.

One night Linus was so unhappy at what his friends said that in the morning his voice was mule.

Well, that day Linus' friends came over to tease and taunt him. While they were playing in the woods, they heard a noise in the bushes. It was a long, low groaning sound, like the sound a motorcycle with about 60 mouse power would make if it were off in the distance.

"What's that?" cried Freckled Freddie.

"Somebody has to go in and see," said Blonde Betty.

But no one would go in because they were all too cow to look.

Poor Linus, unable to say a word due to his buffalo throat, stepped forward and walked slowly into the bushes.

Linus hadn't bothered to tell his friends that his cow Mable and her new calf were behind the bushes.

"Boy is he brave," cried his friends. "But we thought he had more duck sense than to go wandering into the bushes like that."

Out Linus walked with Mable and the calf and began laughing at his friends.

"That will teach you to call me a pigard!" he laughed.

His friends, realizing how unfair they had been, laughed too. That evening Linus invited all his friends over for ice cream and they all ate like turkeys.
