

UEP designates director of welfare

DECATUR, Ga. — Chris Bushway, formerly United Egg Producers' director of Government Relations, has been named by Al Pope, UEP's president, as director of Animal Welfare.

This move was in recognition of the significantly wide-range effect of the animal welfare issue and was done at the request of UEP's committee on animal welfare.

Bushway has been retained by the UEP Board to work on two special projects, the animal welfare issue and the amendment to the industry's checkoff program.

A number of actions were taken by the UEP committee on animal welfare: Gene Gregory was appointed committee chairman; work with the all-industry task force; develop an industry code of good management practice was begun; develop industry situation brochure was begun; establish industry clearinghouse for animal welfare information; Seek academic advisor to committee; develop producer certification program; develop egg industry press kit; establish communication network.

According to Chairman Gregory and Director Bushway, a first draft of the industry code of good management practice could be ready for circulation to committee members within thirty days.

Industry men are encouraged to share animal welfare information and activity by writing Chris Bushway, Director of Animal Welfare, United Egg Producers, 3951 Snapfinger Parkway, Decatur, Georgia 30035.

Saving dunes

methods to stop the erosion, including putting up expensive boulders as barricades, but nothing ever worked.

"The beauty of this project is that there's hardly been any expense. The plants, whose root system will save the dunes naturally, were mostly donated. I guess nobody ever thought of it before because of the labor involved. No one had the time."

That's all changed, and today, dozens of nearby civic groups are involved with the project, the FFA advisor says.

"The project was really an experiment when we started," he says, "but it has worked beautifully, and it will work anywhere."
