ploughed through the mud of spring and the snows of winter to make rural emergency calls.

—The massive hay wagon with its thick aged wood and rust-pocked metal to match

These and many more stand side-by-side — the fully restored with shining enamel and iron contrasting with age-worn originals awaiting the patient and caring hands of a new owner.

But to hear the "silent stories" that the vehicles might tell, you must come early long before an auction begins. For antiques are like some humans, they become absolutely quiet in big crowds.

Heavy wood and metal is found on one of the more substantial vehicles at the Martin sale. It is listed as a hay wagon. Bed of the wagon is actually divided into two sections. Divider is found at the depression just behind the front wheel, which is heavily braced with sheet metal.

Horse-drawn vehicles come from all over the country for the annual Martin auction near Intercourse. This load was pulled behind a camper all the way from Michigan.
