Association and is in his fifth term as a director. He is also serving on PFA's 15-member dairy action committee which, he says, "considers a good many problems."

Within the Guernsey breed he is a local and state director of the York-Adams Guernsey Association. He enjoys promoting Guernsey cows, stating, "It's easier to work with gentle cows."

He feels these community activities are vital, stating, "It helps us understand our own problems and it helps to share yours with others. Too many people join in name only. They don't get anything out of it if they don't put anything into it."

He also serves as a group purchasing coordinator for the area, saying, "We didn't go into it to compete with local people but as a means of holding prices in line."

Mrs. Myers can often be found in the barn or milk house doing her share, but she also works part time in the kitchen of a home for retarded children. One daughter lives at home, a son is in the Army and another son John farms across the field from Mervin on his grandfather's farm with his wife Ginger who previously worked for the Pennsylvania Guernsey Association.

Mervin and David may have met one goal of having the high state herd, but they will continue to strive for perfection in their Guernsey herd, and they will continue to promote the attributes of the Guernsey cow.

David approaches his favorite gentle Guernsey cows as they graze in the pasture of their Adams County farm.
