Ida's Notebook

Ida Risser

My husband has decided that he would like to try his hand at fishing. This is a sport which I greatly enjoyed many years ago—before I was married.

When I worked in an office for eight years, the pressures of the job were forgotten as I sat leisurely fishing in the Conestoga on a summer evening. But somehow I haven't found the time, even though I live a stone's throw from the river and look at it every hour, to sit down and fish in recent years.

Thus, early on a Saturday morning, I found myself being awakened and told it was time to start on our trip to Raystown Lake which is south of State College. We had made plans to meet our son, Jeffrey, at the Seven Points Marina.

It was a day when the weather threatened to rain any minute and did on our three hour drive there. Luckily, after we rented a boat and were rocking away, due to the wake of power boats, we got no more rain.

Jeffrey has a small motor boat. So, we didn't need to exert ourselves to row but were able to tour a part of the 30-mile-long lake easily. He was our instructor in casting and using the appropriate lures. It wasn't a day for catching fish though as even the large boats that were out all day only caught one or no fish at all.

Before driving home, we visited another part of this serpentine lake that covers 118 miles of shoreline near the town of Aitch. Before I saw the name on the map, I thought my husband was saying "H". There is not only boating, camping and swimming but also beautiful wooded hills surrounding the dammed-off Juniata River. The Raystown Lake is part of a flood control system on the Susquehanna River Basin and was built from 1968 to 1973 at a cost of a $76 million.

Now that I have a fishing license again, I'm hoping that one of these days I can try casting my line in the nearby Conestoga River again.
