Ida's Notebook

Ida Risser

We met our daughter and her year-old son, who live in Seattle, Washington, at the Philadelphia Airport. Their planned vacation had been postponed several weeks due to her husband's business commitments.

About the only way that we could pry little David from his mother was to give him a tour of our farm. He really enjoyed the animals with the dog, kittens and cows at the top of the list. A few new words were added to his vocabulary due to his new environment. I even brought the old wooden wagon, that my parents bought for me when I was a small child, from the attic and pulled him up our long lane.

When we drove our guests to meet their relatives in New York state, we surely picked a rainy weekend. We had hoped to do some fishing at Little Pine State Park and did manage to do a bit one afternoon. That is, we got started after working a while to put together our new fishing poles and figure out where the hooks, the float and the sinkers should be placed. We know that we have a lot to learn but beginners luck was with us and we caught six fish.

Then we drove to Bald Eagle State Park and reserved a boat for the next day. The trouble was that the rain which started that night, while we slept in an expensive hotel, never stopped during the whole next day. So we decided to visit two homes that were listed in a recreational guide from the Pa. Dept. of Environmental Resources. What we found was that one had never ever been opened to the public and the other was only open 6 hours in a week on alternate days.

Therefore, the only thing left to do was to head for home, through the steady rain, with at least a few fish in our ice chest.

Guernsey breeders to hold annual picnic

YORK — When the York-Adams Guernsey breeders summer picnic winds up on the evening of Thursday, July 30, some lucky youngster will take home a real prize, a registered Guernsey calf.

Awarding the calf to the drawing winner will climax the Guernsey breeder's annual chicken barbecue, hosted this year at Rutter's Dairy Farms, north of York. Judging of several classes is also planned, with prizes to be awarded to division winners.

The barbecue chicken dinner will be served at 7 p.m., at the cost of $4.25 for adults, $2.25 for children, 4-H and FFA members, and youngsters under age 8 are free.

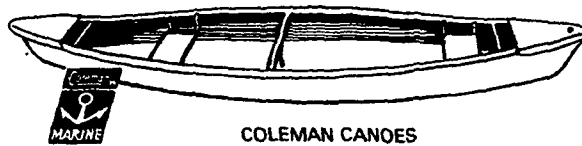

Reservations can be made with the York Extension office, 757-9657, with an absolute cutoff date of July 23.-JB
