

Workshop on goats

PHILADELPHIA — A workshop on the production, processing and products of goat's milk will be held at the Eastern Regional Research Center, 600 E. Mermaid Lane, Philadelphia, August 11-12.

The two-day affair will highlight advances in goat milk use, which is on the threshold of becoming a more important agricultural product.

Goats are increasingly important in the worldwide effort to eliminate hunger and malnutrition. Their small size, compatibility with humans and adaptability to marginal lands also give them economic importance in the U.S., where goat associations have grown from fewer than 500 members to more than 10,000 in the past two years.

Among the subjects discussed will be: Biochemistry of goat milk; Milk handling practices; Alternatives in goat dairying; Milk record use for genetic evaluation.

LANCASTER — The Pennsylvania State University campus will provide the setting for 4-H State Achievement Days to be held next week, August 10-13.

Four-H'ers from across the state will gather to represent the county and their individual projects, and will compete for state honors.

For more information contact Andrew Walker, N.E. Regional Information Office, Agricultural Research Service, USDA, Beltsville, Md. 20705, (301) 344-3530.

Over 20 types of 4-H projects will be represented there, with the most popular being archery, clothing and textiles, dairy judging, flower judging, gardening, livestock, poultry, cooking and vegetable judging.

State Achievement Days provides an excellent opportunity for 4-H members to be recognized for their achievement while competing in a statewide event. They will also have a chance to become acquainted with 4-H members from other counties. The members will be able to visit Penn State's campus to get a first hand look at college life.
