LANCASTER — As cooler weather sets in, rats and mice start to become more visible around farm buildings as they seek shelter from winter's winds, says Dr. Dwight Schwartz, Penn State Extension veterinarian.

Home owners and farmers often put out pesticides to get rid of rodents at this time. Many of the commonly used products for rat and mouse control contain a chemical belonging to the warfarin family of pesticides. While there are many different members of this family of chemicals, they all cause death by hemorrhage.

While these products are marketed as being relatively safe for pets, livestock and humans, there is still the possibility of illness and death, especially to pets and hogs. Warfarin type poisoning is the third most common kind of toxicity reported in dogs.

On a dose per pound of body weight basis, hogs are much more sensitive to the effects of this product than rats or dogs. Only 300 milligrams in a single dose can cause uncontrollable bleeding in a 220 pound hog. Dogs and cats require five to 50 milligrams per 2.2 pounds of body weight to produce signs of poisoning.

Warfarin type pesticides are usually marketed in a grain bait which will be attractive to rodents. While dogs and cats do not usually eat grain, many cases of poisoning in pets are reported every year. Curious or hungry pets do eat things they are not expected to consume and poisoning results.

The home owner or livestock producer planning to control rodents on his/her premises should be aware of the type of pesticide which he/she is using. The material should be placed where pets and livestock cannot eat it. Licensed, commercial pesticide applicators can be helpful in controlling this sort of problem. If sickness occurs in pets or livestock, the veterinarian will need to know the kind of pesticide used in order to use the proper treatment for the poisoning.

Curious children are also poisoned each year by eating products such as these. Like all other toxic substances used on the farm or in the household, they should be kept under lock and key to protect children and other unsuspecting persons.

Make his Holiday Happy.
Make it Husqvarna

This Husqvarna is the work of one design engineer.

He spends a lot of time engineering it. And a lot more time out in the woods working with the prototype. He may decide it needs to go back to the drawing board.

When he's satisfied himself — he's satisfied the toughest critic he has.

That's why the Husqvarna chain saw you buy will exceed your expectations. Because it's not created by the compromise of a committee. It's built on the integrity of one man.
