Flintlock 'unloaded' if primer powder removed

HARRISBURG — Flintlock rifle users are cautioned to be especially careful during the upcoming flintlock deer season December 26 -January 2. Few flintlock accidents have been recorded in the past, and the Game Commission hopes the fine safety record can be maintained.

To avoid hardships on flintlock users, the Game Commission previously ruled that flintlocks are considered "unloaded" if the primer powder is removed from the pan. The Game Law provides that loaded guns are unlawful in a vehicle in Pennsylvania.

A flintlock uses two different types of black powder, one in the barrel of the gun and another on the pan outside the breech end of the barrel. When the trigger is pulled, the flint strikes the frizzen, producing a shower of sparks which ignites the powder in the pan, in turn burning through a tiny flashhole into the rifle barrel and igniting the powder there.

It is difficult to remove the projectile and powder from the rifle barrel without firing the gun, so the flintlock is considered by the Game Commission to be unloaded if the powder is removed from the pan.

Although the legal requirement for unloading the gun is met by removing the powder from the pan, some experienced flintlock users and safety officials feel the powder should be removed from the rifle barrel for the firearm to be completely safe.

Regardless of the method used to unload the gun during hunting hours, at the end of the day the gun should be discharged by firing into the ground or a dead tree stump or other suitable backstop.
