

Ida's Notebook

Ida Risser

meeting or something important that had to be accomplished.

The first weekend was a busy one. We traveled to Penn State for the commencement program where we saw our son get his Ph.D. It is a long and sometimes hard road to a doctorate in agronomy. Afterward, we had a nice family gathering at Mt. Nittany Inn and caught up on the news.

He told us that he will be flying to Texas for a job interview. And, I had to smile when he said that he was asked to pose for a bank advertisement in a local paper. All that education in his head and now they realize that he also has a pleasing physique.

And another chuckle followed when he said that someone asked him if he was the original owner of the 1950 Dodge that he drives—actually it was his Grandfather's car.

The following day we saw our little granddaughter baptised. Then our youngest, Cindy, returned on the train from her weekend stay with friends at the University of Pennsylvania in Philadelphia. She gathered her suitcase and we set out for Penn State again. My husband and I were crammed in the back seat because she did the driving and as she is almost six feet tall she needed lots of room for her legs.

On the way home we took a few back roads and I had an opportunity to photograph a picturesque, round, red barn. We even stopped to see a friend who we'd only known previously through telephone conversations.

When we got home it was nice to see the lights in the milking parlor as Philip was doing the milking for us. He too left three days later for college where he will graduate in May. But even though the children have gone back to school, I know there will be plenty of things to keep us busy.

When I lifted the "February" page on our kitchen calendar to "March", I was surprised or should I say horrified. There were only about five or six days that did not already have a notification of a
