

Ida's Notebook

Ida Risser

As we traveled East we stopped each day to see one or two places of interest. Thus we spent one afternoon and evening at Salt Lake City, Utah.

While there we took a walking tour through the Temple Square. The majestic six-spired Temple dominates the lavish grounds of this 10-acre site. We heard the Mormon Tabernacle Choir sing in the evening and we examined the religious exhibits in the North and South Visitor Centers. They spent a lot of time explaining their origin from their sailing to the Americas as the ancestors of the American Indian, to the translating of the plates of gold that they say Joseph Smith dug up near Palmyra, N.Y.

We also spent time looking through the largest genealogical library in the world. The tour of Brigham Young's 1853 house, (he succeeded Smith as leader of the Mormons) was quite interesting. It was his official family residence but the "Lion House" next door was not open to the public. Here is where his 27 wives and 51 children lived. The flower surrounding the public buildings were absolutely gorgeous. On our way out of town that night we saw a grass fire that had just been started by a bolt of lightning.

We visited a museum in western Colorado devoted to the Ute Indians, prairie flowers and animals. It was over 100 degrees as we drove through Pike National Forest and later stopped to go through the "Cave of Winds" at Manitou Springs in Colorado. Walking in the large cave was anticlimactic to the torturous climb up a narrow hairpin-curved road to its entrance in a car whose motor got overheated.

we stopped at Abilene to see the Eisenhower chapel, library and home. Then we drove through flat land with small oil wells in the middle of harvested wheat fields. Their fence posts were slabs of limestone set up many years ago.

The last two days we drove over 1000 miles through Missouri, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, W. Virginia, Maryland and finally arrived in Pennsylvania. We had blue skies and sunshine every day of our trip, but even so, we were glad to be home.

August 15. Cost of tickets is $5 for adults, $2.50 for children 6-12, with youngsters under age 5 served free.

The York County Fiddler's grounds is located off Route 74, south of Red Lion. Signs will be posted to the picnic site.
