

Even though our customers have found it quite profitable to be able to wait until after harvest to make their final buying decisions.

56 big reasons for waiting to buy until after you harvest

Why buy a hybrid again today that may not prove out this fall in your fields — or in the farmer-run trials nearby?

We keep trying to interest our competitors in not selling early. But each year the rascals keep running around pestering farmers with pleas to buy early.

We keep asking them what's your hurry? Why not wait until fall when farmers like you have their yields in so they really know where they're at?

All the yield trials in the box on the right are that many reasons for waiting to buy. Each of those trials will produce valuable evidence on the new hybrids that have proven themselves so well the last few years. And they'll provide concrete facts on the new hybrids we've just introduced. How else can you gain access to data information on hybrids you're waiting to buy? And where else can you get that information for cent from Jacques Seed Co. — the shape on seed for over 200,000 acres of seed production in 10 over six states.

So tell those other seed salesmen that you believe in not buying early too. Your Jacques dealer will be around to see you when your corn is in the bin and the fall results are ready to see. Send in the coupon for a copy of the 1982 Yieldbook so you can see why so many people are waiting to buy
