

Indian farmers

Many of their motifs - woodpeckers, turtles, "weeping eyes," "eagle warriors," and others - are found, more crudely executed, in Mud Glyph Cave.

In some cases, a drawing in the cave appears to have been struck with a club, suggesting an attempt to harm the real object the glyph represents. Scientists call this imitative magic.

In other cases, Faulkner believes, the Indians who made the glyphs may have been engaged in "vision questing" - seeking out a vision that could help tell the future - or in hunting magic - seeking diving assistance in future hunts.

"What I'm interested in is whether there are more of these caves around there," Faulkner says. "I've been in other caves where there is mud on the walls that has been there for a long time, and it's obvious that Indians have been in there from other evidence, and we don't see any drawings."

Isn't it possible that the glyphs were made as a form of artistic expression rather than for a practical purpose? Faulkner, recalling how hard it is to reach the glyph corridor, doubts it.

"It's possible, but I don't think so," he says. "If they went all the way back in this cave to do this art, I don't think they were doing it just for the fun of it."

Help your dog be a good neighbor

LANCASTER - The 1983 Pennsylvania Dog Law does more than spell out this year's licensing fees. It reminds us that we are responsible for our dog's behavior. According to Dr. L. Dwight Schwartz, Extension veterinarian at Penn State, the law can help you and your dog be good neighbors.

If your dog is six months of age or older, be sure you get a license from your county treasurer or reporters, Jennifer Eckel, Krista Knox, Jennifer Rodriguez and Kari Nachbar.

The next meeting will be held on Feb. 11 at the Farm and Home Center. Anyone interested in becoming a member should call 569-8692.

licensing agent. It's not expensive and it's not intended to be a nuisance tax. Dog licenses are an important element in the statewide mandate to maintain peaceful co-existence between dogs and people.

All dogs must be kept on your property or under reasonable control. Some local governments further specify that dogs should be leashed when not confined. Check your dog ordinance to be sure of the requirements in your area.

If you let your dog run at large, unaccompanied, on public streets or other people's property, any police officer or state dog warden can seize and detain it. Even worse, if your dog is considered to be a threat to public health and welfare, it could be killed on the spot!

Once caught running loose, your dog will be kept and fed, but you will have to pay a fine and pay for its keep before you can have it back. The owner listed on your dog's license will be sent a notice, by certified mail, to collect the dog within five days. If you don't collect the dog by that time, it can be sold or destroyed in some humane manner. If your dog is running loose without its license, the police or dog warden will have no way of contacting the owner. Then your dog may be destroyed after 48 hours.

Anyone who sees dogs pursuing, wounding, or killing livestock, poultry, other dogs, household pets, or attacking humans can kill the dog on the spot without liability. In addition, the dog owner is liable for all damages and medical costs.

Anyone attacked by a dog can make a complaint of trespass, charging the owner or keeper with harboring a vicious dog. That person will be given a summons and have to appear before the district justice. Once a dog is designated vicious, if it is not confined, the owner or keeper may have to pay fines of $100 to $500 and have to post bond to insure payment for additional damages or injuries.

If your dog bites, it could be detained and isolated for 10 days or longer and you will have to pay all medical costs of the victim as well as costs for the dog's confinement.

If you want more specific information on the dog laws in your area, contact your local police and ask. Most incorporated areas, cities and towns have specific laws which you and your dog must obey to be good neighbors.
