Ida's Notebook

Ida Risser

Often I wish that I knew more about music than I do. My musical education consisted of a year or two piano lessons after I was old enough to drive myself to a teacher. They say "practice makes perfect" and I simply do not practice.

We bought a used piano when our oldest daughter was in elementary school and she took lessons and eventually bought her own piano. She also practiced faithfully on the violin and was able to play in her college orchestra. The other girls had flute lessons and piano lessons.

Cindy played in her high school band for several years and also played solos in our church. But, our three boys showed no interest in music lessons.

The reason that I got to thinking about music was the discovery of two very old music books that were in my family. The one was published "in the thirty-fifth year of the independence of the United States of American, A.D. 1810" by John Wyeth. It belonged to my great, great grandfather, Henry Shreiner, and is a "Repository of Sacred Music." The cover is in bad shape and appears to be made of bits of cloth and some form of paper pulp. The titles of the songs range from "Alpha," "Devotion," "Lenox," "Middletown" and "St. Helens" to "Treasure."

Another music book in my possession is dated 1825 and was hand drawn by "Martin Shreiner, mill wright." All the lines, notes and words are written in ink by him. Some songs are in German and I can't read the script. It contains titles like "Nobody coming to marry me," "Blue Eyed Mary," "Jefferson's March" and "The Washerwoman." It was written over a period of six months and must have taken lots of time and patience to carefully copy it by hand.
