Grow Wildflowers at Home

NORRISTOWN — Have you romantic visions of fields of wildflowers just beyond your garden gate? Many do and it's just that picture that has led several seed growers to offer assortments of wild flower mixes to catalog buyers this year. However, few of us have the room or even the garden gate to make that vision a reality.

"Meadow in a Can," and regional wildflower mixes, may seem a bit like weeds in most landscaped areas near your house," says Paul N. Reber, Montgomery County Agent. Most of these mixes are annuals that rely on their own seed distribution to continue year after year. They need to be grown in open areas.

Wild flower mixes may be exactly what you want if you have the room — an unused back forty or fallow field. If you live in town and have an open area you'd like to seed, you may have difficulty with your local weed ordinance since the area will have to be left uncut most of the growing season so seeds can ripen.

Nevertheless, you might try some wildflowers in a small area or border where you will be able to control or contain them. But keep in mind that these mixes are often expensive. If your space and pocketbook are limited, you may do better by selecting specific species suited to your own garden conditions and buy seeds or plants of these types.
