Young Farmers

Arthur Hershey was awarded first in the silage contest, producing 20 tons of silage at 9.0 total digestible nutrients (TDN). Other winners were: William Stoltzfus, second, 13 tons at 8.1 TDN; Nelson Stoltzfus, third, 22 tons at 7.95 TDN; and John Brubaker, fourth, 21 tons at 7.89 TDN.

New officers were also elected. They are president John Brubaker, vice president Kenneth Umble, secretary Steve Kauffman, treasurer Larry Hershey and public relations Melvin Stoltzfus.

The awards banquet ended with a slide presentation on European agriculture by Newton Bair, former Lebanon County extension agent.

Youth Conservation School Planned

LANCASTER — A Youth Conservation School is again being sponsored jointly by the Lancaster county Conservation District and the Federated Sportsman's Clubs of Lancaster County. The School is a week-long resident camp that is held at the Northern Lancaster County Fish and Game Association grounds in West Cocalico Township.

Boys and girls, ages 14-16, are eligible to attend through sponsorship by a Sportsman's Club, an environmental group, or possibly, a service organization. The cost to attend is $65 per student. Dates for this year's School are July 22-28.

The goal of the school is to introduce youth to natural resource conservation. Instruction is done by professional resource people and other trained conservationists. Topics covered include: orienteering, survival, forestry, soil and water conservation, stream improvement, aquatic biology, wildlife management, and firearm safety. Students interested in pursuing employment in the field of natural resources would greatly benefit from the school. The program is geared toward education and only those students genuinely interested in learning about conservation should attend.

For additional information, please contact Tim Breneisen at the Lancaster County Conservation District Office at (717) 299-5361.
