Ida's Notebook

Ida Risser

The last day of my eight day trip was spent in Puerto Rico. Our breakfast of orange juice, figs, sweet bun, ham omelet and coffee was served on the ship by our Italian waiters - Domenico and Enzo. Going through customs this time was a breeze compared to my European trip.

When we were ashore, they packed twelve of us into a van for a tour of the Rain Forest and Luquillo Beach. Our first stop was at a beautiful waterfall to take pictures. We saw orchids growing on the tree trunks and were told that there are 90 different kinds.

Despite the fact that my shoe strap tore early in the day, when I twisted my ankle, I climbed a tower built at some 4,000 feet for observation during World War II. The view was worth the effort. The average annual temperature is 77 degrees which means that the climate is uniform and healthful.

As Spain owned the island until they lost the war with the United States in 1898, most of the population is of Spanish descent with some white and Negro mixture. Many are farm laborers and live in poor one-room cabins.

However, in the cities we saw many government housing projects.

They grow sugar cane, pineapples, tobacco, coffee and bananas as they receive over 200 inches of rain per year. But, the main industry is textiles - their embroidery work is excellent too.

We drive through old and new San Juan and noticed the decorative iron grillwork on the windows. They are there for protection during the hurricanes that blow across the country each year. There are very few wild animals but a wide variety of birds including parrots, canaries, herons and pelicans.

I spend most of the afternoon in the large airport as I didn't feel it was safe to wander about the city by myself. Here I met and talked with several other couples who were also waiting for flights home. Many people had been on several cruises before this one. This was my first one but I would recommend it to anyone who wants a week in the warm sun during the snowy winter weather of eastern Pennsylvania.
