

Ida's Notebook

Ida Risser

Spring seems to be the time of the year when many companies hold their annual stockholder's meetings. Over the years, I've attended several of these in our county and outside of it. Of course, I realize that my presence does not make any difference in how the business is run. Yet, there is a certain satisfaction in at least attending their meetings to find out what other people think about the business.

I've gone by train, by chartered bus and by car in the past. Some stockholders meetings are more interesting than others. When the people attending ask questions about the operation of the business, it is always a challenge for the chairman to give an immediate answer that is correct and presented in a diplomatic manner. Recently I attended an all-day meeting in an adjoining county. My seat companion on the bus was a retired mechanical engineer.

The first thing that he said to me was, "Oh, you're going to visit your money." He had moved from an adjoining state to be near his grandchildren. His family had a Czechoslovakian background and had been in the glass business for many generations.

The meeting was held in a grand old building with gilded ornamental trim with very large rooms. Entertainment was provided after the business meeting and a nice meal was served before our trip home.

For the past ten years, I've been involved in other people's financial problems. First as a trustee and then later I had power-of-attorney. One must enjoy figures and trips to lawyer's offices in order to get through the whole ordeal. However, dabbling in stocks and bonds can become a fascinating pastime providing there are more ups than downs in the market.

Program on elderly parents scheduled

DELAWARE COUNTY — Many people are faced with questions and problems as their parents and relatives are growing older. If you would like to explore this topic, here is a workshop designed for you.

On May 17, 24, and June 7th the Delaware County Cooperative Extension Service of the Penn State University will present topics of importance to you from 12:30 to

2:30 in the Hunt Club Building, Rose Tree Park, 1521 N. Providence Road, Media, Pa. 19063.

Doctors and other professionals working in this area will present the information. Please register by May 14th, by calling 565-9070 or write to the above address. Penn State is an affirmative action, equal opportunity university.
