

Miriam Forney, cookbook committee chairman, looks through her file of recipes she received from Grange members for the cookbook.

Pa. Grange Cookbook available on computer tape

BY SUZANNE KEENE

NAZARETH — The Pennsylvania Grange's new cookbook contains all the vital ingredients - appetizers and beverages, soups, salads, casseroles, jellies and desserts - but it comes with a new twist. This cookbook will be available on computer tape for those cooks who have access to home computer systems.

Miriam Forney, cookbook committee chairman, said the publisher suggested they offer the cookbook on computer tape as an additional selling point. Putting the book on tape will also make it easier for future editions, eliminating the need to proofread each time the book is published, said Ed Borris, of E.M. Borris Graphic Design, the company that is working with the Grange on this project.

In the past the Grange has successfully marketed three other cookbooks. Their first cookbook, published in 1925, was a 167-page washable book that soon became a best seller. Proceeds from the book reached $12,600 and went toward building a dormitory for students at Penn State University.

Because the first book was so successful, the women's activities committee printed a second edition in 1951 to gain funds for a new headquarters building.

Grange homemakers were again asked to submit recipes in 1971. This third edition went through seven printings and continues to sell thousands of copies each year.

This latest cookbook, which is scheduled for final publication in June, contains 1,500 recipes submitted by Grange members.

The Pennsylvania Grange's fourth cookbook is scheduled for publication early in June. A unique feature of the cookbook is that it will be offered on computer tape.

The Grange published its first cookbook in 1925 and went on to produce two more because of their success. They are currently working on their fourth edition.
