champion, with Ohio resident Daniel A. Rapp showing the reserve champion.

In Monday's cow/calf pairs competition Rick Blanchard of California came away with top honors, and Jay Pfeiffer of Oklahoma was awarded the reserve grand position.

Monday also marked the beginning of the judging of heifers owned but not bred by the exhibitors. The largest of all the divisions, this owned-heifer category was composed of 19 classes, with judging concluding at lunchtime on Tuesday.

Brad Worthington of Illinois managed to lead his heifer, Princess Jamie IR, all the way to the grand championship, with Ohio resident Victoria Johnson's female right behind him as reserve grand champion.

Tuesday also marked the conclusion of the showmanship contest, begun during the previous afternoon. Rodney Morris of Illinois was selected as top showman. total of seven animals in the top five places in class competition. Heading the list of winners was Fritz Frey of Quarryville, whose heifer, R F Lady Big Sky, placed second in her class in owned-heifer

Judging the showmanship competition were Bill Bowman of Missouri, Wayne Strawn of Illinois, and Pennsylvania's Greg Krueger from Coatesville. Though no show champions were selected from the lineup of Pennsylvania entries, the Keystone State's Angus cattlemen can be proud of their Junior Association's accomplishments.

Pennsylvania juniors placed a total of seven animals in the top five places in class competition. Heading the list of winners was Fritz Frey of Quarryville, whose heifer, R F Lady Big Sky, placed second in her class in owned-heifer competition. Frey also garnered a third-place win in the bred-andowned division with T O F Friskys Pride, and an eighth-place ownedheifer placing with Twin Oaks Lady Bell.

"This was the best I ever did, and I was real proud of my heifers," said the veteran of five national Angus shows.

Also registering a third place win in her owned-heifer class was Skarship Kyma 1033, owned by Jan Waltz of Manheim.

"I'm real happy," said last year's Farm Show winner at the conclusion of the Ohio show. "There were a lot of good heifers at the show, and I really didn't expect to place as high as I did."

Other Pennsylvania wins included Deborah Hoffman of Dover, whose bull, D J H Evidence, placed fifth in his class in the bred-andowned bull division; West Chester resident Kenneth Walker, whose L A Beauty Queen was selected fourth in her owned-heifer class; Catherine White of Nottingham, with a third-place owned-heifer win by her heifer W Sky Wendy 1; Eric Ligo of Mercer, with a fourthplace owned-heifer win by Rains Skylight B P 8.

The Pennsylvania Juniors were also selected third in a competition to determine the best displays by the junior Associations.

Among Pennsylvania's neighboring states, Ohio emerged the winner, placing three bred-andowned bulls, one bred-and-owned heifer and six owned heifers in the top five. Winning animals in the latter category included Victoria Johnson's entry, Summitcrest Miss Angus R003, selected as reserve grand champion owned heifer. Miss Angus was sired by Pennsylvania-bred P S Power Play.

Ohio also accounted for seven class wins in steer competition, including the reserve grand champion steer, and a third-place in the contest involving groups of five head.

Other successful nearby states included Maryland with one topfive class win in bred-and-owned heifer competition, and one in steer competition. West Virginia placed two bred-and-owned bulls in the top five in their respective classes, and Virginia registered a top-five place in the bred-andowned heifer division.
