Sheep farming session set

FLEMINGTON, N.J. — The New Jersey Dorset Sheep Breeders Association will be sponsoring a panel discussion on the pros and cons of small sheep farming on Friday Oct. 12, at 8 p.m., at the Hunterdon County Extension Center, Route 31, Flemington.

Members of the panel include: Beth Perry, well-known Dorset breeder in New Jersey. Mrs. Perry has been involved with the sheep industry for over 50 years. She and her son, Charles, have a flock of 75 Dorset brood ewes, both horned and polled, and run the New Jersey Sheep Breeders store from their farm.

Bob Rogers, together with his wife, Liz, run a 50-ewe Hampshire brood flock in Burlington County for the past 20 years. They usually also carry a minor breed and, currently, they are lambing about a dozen Corriedales.

William Rockafellow, of Bucks County, Pa., has been very active in the sheep farming business. He has approximately 100 Dorset and Suffolk ewes in his flock which he has built up over the past six years. He is currently President of the Bucks and Montgomery County Wool Cooperative, a member of the Bucks County 4-H Committee. He has also taught sheep production classes in Bucks County.

Karen Butcher of Greendell, Sussex County, graduated from Delaware Valley College with a B.S. in Animal Husbandry. She recently received her M.S. from the University of Connecticut. Her research at the university dealt with embryo transfers in sheep along with semen evaluation with rams. Karen and her sisters have a flock of Dorsets and Suffolks.

Jonathan R. Youde is a graduate of the North Scotland College of Agriculture. He began life with traditional sheep farming in the Scottish highlands, then moving south for intensive sheep production where he was involved with Suffolk crosses, Romney's and some pedigreed Texels. After a brief spell with a wholesale meat company as a livestock buyer he returned to shepherding, running 4,000 mule ewes (Border Leicester x Swaledale). He is presently shepherd for Barrettstown Joy Farm, Whitehouse, running 550 ewes.

Everyone interested in sheep farming is invited to this informative panel discussion. For additional information, call Jane Ladany - (609) 397-2879, or Ruth Crommelin - (201) 236-2324.

Dairyalea youth to meet

SYRACUSE, N.Y. — Area young persons will assume leadership of their own convention when Dairyalea Cooperative, the Northeast's largest farm-to-consumer milk marketing cooperative, holds its 77th Annual Meeting at Hotel Syracuse, Syracuse, N.Y. Tuesday and Wednesday.

Dairyalea's Young Cooperators, the Co-op's youth division, will hold a full-scale convention of their own, complete with business meetings, elections, and informational sessions, according to Bob Schulerud of Valatie, N.Y., president of the Young Cooperator Executive Committee.

Dairyalea President Clyde Rutherford and General Manager Bob Hall will address the Young Cooperators at the YC breakfast

Wednesday. Dairy Princesses of New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania will also be on hand for the breakfast.

The young men and women, who range in age from 12 to 25, will be among an anticipated 1,000 delegates, associate delegates, member families, and guests participating in the Cooperative's 77th Annual Meeting. Dairyalea has some 3,000 member families in its seven state region and marketed more than $363 million worth of milk during its fiscal year ended March 31, 1984.

Representatives from Pennsylvania will include Mark and Felicia Woodruff, Danville; Jim Smith, Lawrenceville; and Nancy and Trudy Vail, Honesdale.
